Raja Nasir, Azlan Yus, Irti Osman. (1979, Malaysia) Hassan Muthalib sets out to make a true portrait of a culture that's been brutally oppressed by the British and has just emerged from colonial rule. He succeeds brilliantly. That the film was shot in Borneo (Raja Nasir, with whom Muthalib has collaborated on five previous films, including Rahsia, directed by Muthalib in 1974) is merely a tribute to the composer and screenwriter's indomitable spirit. Raja Nasir, actor, singer, composer, and Bornean national hero, was forced to leave his homeland and take refuge in a refugee camp in Thailand when the film was shot in 1979. He has a small role. Hassan Muthalib, the Malaysian director, and producer, has set out to break away from the stereotyped portrayal of Malays in Bollywood. For this he's teamed up with Raja Nasir, whose life and musical genius he's created. The film shows a number of facets of Malay culture — particularly the Malay Muslim community's sense of identity and loyalty to traditional values. One of the most potent images is that of Hassan Muthalib himself. Much has been said about his sombre, contemplative camera-work, but its true genius is evident in this performance — and in the film. I've always felt that Hassan Muthalib is Malaysia's best director. Hassan's films include: Ikhlas (1977), Dasar Padu Padu (1978), Teladan (1980), Rahsia (1974), Bulan Laut (1975), and Nasib (1979). Directed by Hassan Muthalib. Produced by Hassan Muthalib. Written by Hassan Muthalib. Cinematography by D.D.I. Aminul Islam. Original music by L.A. Chand. Editing by Santi. Film music by L.A. Chand.
